HORATIO ROBINSON STORER, A.M., M.D., LL.D.

Honorary President of the Gynecological Society of Boston, and late President of the Newport Medical Society; Honorary Member of the Canadian Medical Association, New Brunswick Medical Society, Medical Society of Finland; Corresponding Member of the Obstetrical Societies of London, Berlin; Member of the American Medical Association and Rhode Island Medical Society; and Member of the Newport Historical Society, etc.

Dr. Storer, coming of a distinguished New England ancestry, his progenitor having come to America in 1634, was born in Boston, Mass., in 1830. After graduating from Harvard in 1850, and from the Harvard Medical School, he spent two years in European study and travel, serving for a winter as assistant to Sir James Y. Simpson, the then most famous gynecologist in the world, at Edinburgh. On returning to Boston, by his pioneer work in gynecology and his surgical skill and boldness he soon won international fame, but in the full tide of professional success, in 1872, he contracted septicæmia in the course of an operation. Thereafter, somewhat shattered health rendered further professional activity impossible, and to occupy his leisure he turned his attention to numismatics, more especially confining his studies to the medals connected with medicine. He wrote copiously, becoming easily the world authority upon the subject, and formed a collection of some four thousand pieces, which he eventually presented to the Boston Medical Library in memory of his father, David Humphreys Storer, sometime professor of midwifery at the Harvard Medical School, and dean of that institution. This collection is referred to, passim, as the "Boston Collection."

On September 18, 1922, Dr. Storer died at Newport, R. I., where he had been living for some forty years, being at the time of his death the Senior Alumnus of Harvard University. He retained his numismatic enthusiasm until the very end, and, indeed, in the days immediately preceding his death, beguiled his time, between attacks of great pain, by working upon the notes upon which this list of medals is based.

An extended obituary of Dr. Storer was published in the "Harvard Graduates Magazine" of March, 1923.

FOREWORD

In commencing what it is hoped may prove of interest to all physicians, all numismatists, and many biographers, historians, and general scientists, a few preliminary words may not be out of place.

But few, unless themselves devoted to the fascinating pursuit of numismatics, have any idea of the extent to which, for ages, the chief matters of importance in the world's progress, and, indeed, the persons themselves who have taken part in its development, have been commemorated upon coins, jetons, and medals. It is not the fashion, in this busy land, to give much attention to matters of medical history, or, indeed, to anything pertaining to what may be called the æsthetics of our profession. There are always, however, a respectable number, even of the most active and practical of physicians, who gladly follow the course of such an investigation, if without trouble to themselves. Thus they obtain a portion, even if not all, of the interest and pleasure of the research.

The first installment of the present work was roughly sketched out many years ago; it is now only partially completed, while the author is in his ninety-second year [Dr. Storer died in 1922]. He commenced publication upon medical medals in 1899, and, debarred from the active practice of his profession by long continued invalidism, his leisure during all these years has been almost exclusively devoted to their collection and study. Should he be prevented from completing this summary by increasing infirmity or death, he trusts that it may be finished and published by his son, Dr. Malcolm Storer, who has long been his efficient aid. His previous enumerations have been given in the "Sanitarian," 1887-1891, "The American Journal of Numismatics," 1889-1912, and the "Proceedings of the Newport Natural History Society," 1888-1889. As the lists have meanwhile enormously increased, and the media of their appearance have been of comparatively limited circulation, he has no hesitation in now reproducing portions of his original language.

Numismatics, as a science, has been gradually becoming divisible into many groups or special departments. History, ancient and modern, sacred and secular music, the drama, theology, law, warfare, and all others of the arts and sciences and professions thus sharply define themselves. Among them, though many seem not aware of the fact, is medicine. So vast is the general field that the development of its many sections may well engross the life of each special worker. An instance of such research, of which many could be given, is the work of I. F. Donaldson ("Architectura Numismatica," London, 1859) wherein the architectural medals of antiquity are illustrated and explained by comparison with the monuments themselves and the descriptions of them by ancient authors.

An attempt will therefore now be made to include the major part of all medals that in any way relate to the science of medicine. There may be, and probably are, many omissions. One who has not himself investigated the subject can hardly appreciate the difficulties that have been experienced in completing this task, so very many of the pieces now given having never previously been placed upon printed record. The summary will include medals relating to physicians, surgeons, veterinarians, dentists, pharmacists, empirics, hospitals, medical colleges and societies, epidemics, sanitation, and, in fact, everything associated with the medical art. Allied to it are necessarily the medals that are medico-ecclesiastical, as well as those of temperance and famine. The medals of some of these subdivisions that are only remotely of medical interest are so innumerable that but a portion of them can be mentioned.

It is interesting to note that at all times among numismatic students and authors medical men have been prominent. Dr. Renauldin has listed the memory of some sixty of these. Among them are Drs. John Arbuthnot, William Hunter, Richard Mead, and Sir Hans Sloane, all of London. More recent are Drs. Wm. Fraser of Dublin, Charles Clay of Manchester, Eng., von Duisburg of Danzig, Kluyskens of Ghent, Rueppel of Frankfort, Brettauer of Trieste; and of this country, Drs. Wm. Lee of Washington, G. A. Fisher of Sing Sing, and G. F. Heath of Monroe, Mich. At present, living, are Drs. F. P. Weber of London, Raphael Blanchard of Paris, and H. B. Jacobs of Baltimore.

A large proportion of the physicians who have been commemorated by medals have been what are technically termed naturalists. In view of the rapid advance of the natural sciences, and the constantly progressing substitution of improved classification and methods of research, there is danger that even the names of these earlier naturalists may be forgotten. To remind the workers of today that some of those who have preceded them may be of value, an ancient saying, apposite in this connection, has been preserved by Bacon, to the effect that at the extremity of the thread of life of each person there hangs a medal which bears his name. At the moment of death, Time detaches them all and casts them into the flood of oblivion, but upon the stream there are swans that collect those that rise to the surface, seize them, and bear them to immortality.

It will be noted that in numismatics relating either to natural or medical science there has but little as yet been published in the English language. In the case of the former group, natural history, much work remains to be done. It will be found that many of its medals perpetuate the knowledge of important sidereal occurrences, and of notable physical perturbations affecting our globe, such as earthquakes, inundations, the flight of locusts, the ravages of war, and the like, and illustrations of a vast number of objects of natural history. As an illustration of this I once prepared for the late Spencer F. Baird of the Smithsonian Institution a long list of the numismatic representations of a single animal, — the American beaver (Castor fiber). As regards ancient natural history, the book of Imhoof-Blumer and Keller ("Tier-und Pflanzen Bilder auf Münzen des klassischen Alterthums") is an example most worthy to be followed. Had advancing years rendered such a thing possible, I should myself have undertaken a compilation of the medals dealing with natural history.

In the case of portrait medals, these are often from the living person, and where not they are usually from the portraits thought most accurate by his contemporaries. They are therefore of the highest importance in forming a just estimate of an author in connection with his works.

REFERENCE LIST

The number after the description of a medal, in heavy type, refers to the following list of publications. In this list the titles are much abbreviated. Considerations of space have forced the editor to omit the extraordinarily complete references prepared by Dr. Storer, he giving practically every single place that a medal has ever been described, together with a list of the errors in description that the various authors have made. The editor gives but one reference to each medal, to some well-known work, and, when possible, to an author who gives an illustration of the medal. In cases in which the medal has not been previously described reference is made to some well-known collection in which there is a specimen, when this is possible.

ANCIENT MEDICAL MEDALS

A very remarkable essay upon the medico-religious attributes of the very earliest of ancient numismatics is that on "Symbolism on Greek Coins," by Mrs. Agnes (Baldwin) Brett. She there considers at great length the swastika, triskeles, etc. Its brief review by Mr. L. Forrer of London is equally interesting. The innumerable symbols on Greek coins are wholly unintelligible save through Friedensburg's book on Symbolism. Physicians will be much interested in consulting Mrs. Brett's truly wonderful book. All these ancient symbols, says Mrs. Brett, "become potent and magic because they are expressions of the vital thing in human life, which is the human Libido."

Though works upon ancient coins are in the aggregate very numerous, but few have as yet discussed the group especially interesting to medical men. While Roman coins have on their reverses designs generally of a more or less conventionalized type, Greek coins, and more especially coins of the Roman provinces, from the diversity and complexity of their designs, offer a wonderfully rich field to the numismatist in which to study in contemporaneous documents the life of the ancients. The frequent wearing out of the dies made of soft metal gave the moneyers a chance to exercise their ingenuity to perpetuate whatever seemed to them of chief interest at the moment. In Greece all coinage was at first identified with religion, and the deities were guardians of this, and their representations or attributes served to guarantee that the money was of standard weight and purity. Either the local guardian deity was represented upon the coins, or its symbol, as the owl upon the coins of Athens. Imperial portraits were not employed until after the apotheosis of Alexander the Great, who, after his death in 323 B.C., was claimed to be a son of Zeus Ammon. The ancients considered it very important to conciliate their several deities on every possible occasion, and the striking of special coins, for circulation or not as currency, was in a great measure inspired by this. Besides, they liked to chronicle the safe delivery of their wives, or even their impregnation, or their taste for the pleasures of conjugal life, as may be seen on a medal of Juno, where she is represented as holding a phallus.¹

Of the ancient deities, in their special functions as protectors of mankind, naturally first comes Aesculapius, the Father of Medicine.

AESCULAPIUS. According to one of the myths a raven — Presager of Woe — brought to Apollo the news that Aigla, or Koronis, daughter of Phlegyer, one of the Lapithae, who as a result of her intrigue with him was pregnant, had betaken herself to the house of Ischys, her cousin, to whom she had been promised in marriage by her father. In great anger, after first changing the raven's coat to black for all time, Apollo hurried to the scene, only to find that Koronis had been slain by the arrows of Artemis the Chaste. From her still warm body he plucked Aesculapius, thus performing the first Caesarian operation. After the child had been exposed upon Mount Myrton, where it was suckled by a goat, he handed it over to the Centaur Chiron, who, as the child grew older, imparted to him his medical lore. The goat episode is shown on a coin of Epidaurus, 138 A.D., where we see the shepherd Aresthanas finding the infant suckling a goat. Finally, in anger at his impiety in attempting to raise the dead, Pluto induced Zeus to slay him with his thunderbolts. This is hinted at by a coin of Pergamon, which bears the head of Aesculapius and Zeus with a bundle of thunderbolts.

Lack of space prevents me from giving all the coins on which the Father of Medicine appears. I will only say that he appears on coins of the greek cities Aegeai, Aigeria, Aigion, Akmoncia, Amastris, Ankyra, Aphrodisias, Athens, Babba, Berytos, Corinth, Cos, Damascus, Epidaurus, Larissa, Marcianopolis, Maronea, Nikaia, Nikopolis, Patras, Parion, Phoenicia as the god Esmun, Rhegium, Serdica, Tricca and Sicyon, and on the Roman series from Brutus to Julian III.

In Greece the cities of Epidaurus and Cnidus, and the islands of Cos and Rhodes, were the chief centers of his worship. He is represented either as a bust or full figure, clean-shaven or bearded, generally clad in a Himation. On a coin of Sicyon of Caracalla we see a statue of him, probably that of ivory and gold by Kalamis.

His attributes are the cupping glass, the omphalos, the serpent, a roll of parchment, a dog, a goat, a cock, a palm branch, and a poppy.

On coins the cupping glass seems especially associated with his son Telesphorus. It appears on a coin of Aigiale (Bernhard, No. 99) and on one of Astakos (Bern. No. 98), together with a pair of pincers used to hold the glass in place. We see it also on coins of Epidaurus and Cos (Bern. No. 102).

The omphalos or Navel was the holy stone at Delphi on which the Oracle sat when delivering her answers. On coins it is generally represented as a ring on which a serpent is coiled. A coin of Pergamus shows such an omphalos with the inscription ASKLEPIOU KAI YGIEIAS.

The serpent was the most common attribute. Into this the god was supposed to introduce himself when consulted. It may also be that it was supposed to teach him its wisdom.

Even at a very tender age a serpent was the constant companion of the god. A coin of Zacynthus (Bern. No. 77) shows the child Aesculapius carrying a coiled serpent. A coin of Magnesia of 31 A.D. shows him stroking the head of a serpent.

ANCIENT MEDICAL MEDALS

Peculiarly associated with him is a staff around which a serpent is twined, — the so-called Staff of Aesculapius. In this connection a curious and very important error has crept into numismatic practice, and it is worthy of consideration not merely for this reason, but as evidencing the classical ignorance not only of many celebrated designers of medals, but of the patrons of art and the members of learned societies employing them, — an ignorance, it is sad to relate, which is frequently exhibited even at the present time, as, for instance, upon the medal of the VIIIth National Italian Medical Congress at Rome in 1909, and, until recently, by the American Medical Association. It consists in confounding the Staff of Aesculapius, bearing but a single or “annotated” serpent, with the caduceus of Mercury, winged or not, but encircled by two serpents in close embrace, or in the act of copulation, as might be supposed from the frequently associated motto “OMNIA TENET COPULA.” This mistake is all too often made by physicians here in the United States. I have elsewhere expressed myself about this egregious error, and I have said that “the winged caduceus of Mercury with its two serpents illustrates his attributes as the patron of thieves and liars.” The Staff of Aesculapius bears but a single serpent, suggesting the pursuit of Wisdom, pure and simple, first, last, and all the time. The staff, furthermore, instead of being a slim wand, like that of Mercury, is a sturdy branch, properly covered with living twigs, emblematic of the fact that Medicine is a live science. The tokens of merchants may properly bear the caduceus, but not the medals of physicians. It is a matter for congratulation that the American Medical Association has of late seen the error of its ways, and that now its emblem is the proper staff.

Dr. Renauldin quotes from Marco Aurelio Severineo,¹ chief of the Hospital for Incurables at Naples, regarding the numismatic employment of the serpent as a symbol of Vigilance, and, additionally, as will be seen, in relation to health and to Ceres, who is represented as drawn by two serpents attached to her car.

The serpent alone is found upon endless coins. Placed above a tripod it marked the Oracle at Delphi, as when upon an omphalos. On the other hand, the caduceus with its two conjoined serpents, found a place upon the medals of Venus, Bacchus, and other deities, and as accompanying certain attributes, as Pax, Concordia, Felicitas, Securitas, and especially Fortuna, the connection of which with that very peculiar deity, Mercury, is more or less easily appreciated. Even in those days there seems to have been a certain amount of disrepute attached to the nimble-fingered god, just as in modern times, in medicine, the metal that recalls his name is suggestive of the disease most of all to be deprecated. The serpent was also, especially when casting its skin, or re-entering itself, the emblem of the renewal of life, and therefor of immortality. It was thus used with Juno, in her function of preserves, as was the serpent of Erichthoneus with Minerva. Upon the Roman-Campanian coins the serpent was always the symbol of life rather than of death or evil.

Coins of Abonuteichos of 131 A.D. and of Nikomedia of 217 A.D. show us a serpent with a human head (Bern. No. 81). These refer to one of the earliest pieces of arrant quackery on record. In 105 A.D. Alexandros brought from Macedonia to Abonuteichos a large tame serpent called Glycon, which he gave out to be a reincarnation of Aesculapius. He fitted to the neck of this serpent a head cleverly fashioned of cloth with movable jaws that apparently gave forth oracular answers, to be paid for in hard cash. This human-headed snake appeared on many Roman coins until the fraud was laid bare by Lucian.

Another human-headed snake was the Egyptian god Serapis, identified by some with Aesculapius, who appears on a coin of Alexandria of 98 A.D. (Bern. No. 83). Sometimes we have pantheistic representations as the coin of Severus (Bern. No. 84), where we find a head that has the attributes of Serapis, Jupiter Ammon, Apollo, and Aesculapius.

Aesculapius held such a place in the religious profession that his temples were filled with votive offerings, as now with saints in many Catholic churches. Temples of the god are shown on coins of Epidaurus (Bern. No. 144), Nikopolis (Bern. No. 145), Seleucia (Bern. No. 146), Pergamon, Pantaleia, Aegeai, and Nysa, and on imperial coins of Caracalla and Gallienus. The coin of Pergamus of Caracalla was struck to commemorate the visit of the Emperor to the local springs in search of relief from the venereal anxieties that had resulted from his tempestuous past.

In most cases these temples (Aesculapeia) were evidently the first medical schools, especially that of Crotona, 450 B.C. Akragas, now Girgenti, has a reference to its school in a coin with the head of Aesculapius (Bern. No. 194). Cnidos was a famous school. Judging by coins there were also doubtless schools at Cos, Rhodes, Cyrene, and Agrigentum.

On a coin of Caracalla with his wife Plautilla we see the Venus of Praxiteles resting her robe on a water jar, with before her Aesculapius with his staff. Upon coins of Pergamus appears his celebrated statue of gold and ivory by Pysomachus. He is generally represented clothed. When nude he is rather the African god of Health, Esmun.¹

The worship of Aesculapius was transferred to Rome during the plague of 291 B.C. Its story is told in verse by Ovid,² and in prose by Valerius Maximus. The Senate is said to have sent nine men to Epidaurus to implore the aid of Aesculapius. One of his serpents entered their galley, and on arriving at Rome swam thence to the "Isola sacra" in the Tiber, where a temple to the god was built. Its site is now occupied by the Church of San Bartolomeo nel Isola. The arrival of the representative of the god was commemorated on a coin of Antoninus Pius (161 A.D.) on which a galley approaches towards two arches of a building, the Pons Fabienus, now Ponte Quattrocapì, with on the prow an erect serpent. The galley is welcomed by the god Tiber. In the background is the Aventine hill (Bern. No. 165). This reverse was reproduced upon the medal of the XIth International Medical Congress at Rome in 1894.

Aesculapius seems at first to have been typified as Salus, but subsequently appears as himself, and his effigy is seen on imperial coins running from Galba to Aurelian.

It is now known that he was also the father of veterinary medicine. A coin of Parion, a city on the Hellespont of the time of Commodus, has for legend, DEO AESC(ulapio) SVB(venienti), with Aesculapius enthroned raising the right foot of a horse to examine it (Bern. No. 63).

Among the other attributes of Aesculapius should be mentioned a roll of parchment. This appears on a coin of Apamea of Trajan Decius, where he is holding such a roll with Hygeia and Telesphorus beside him.

The dog that watched him when exposed as an infant appears on coins of Epidaurus (Bern. Nos. 59, 60), where the dog lies crouched under the chair in which the god is seated.

The goat that nourished him may be referred to on the coins of Aigeai. A goat was the emblem of that city, where there was a strong cult of Aesculapius.

Many gods and demigods other than Aesculapius had medical attributes. Zeus himself, propagator of the world, might be included as Zeus Soter. His power of transforming himself on occasion of his numerous amours by the most unlikely of animated or other disguises, as that of the swan with Leda, the bull with Europa, and the shower of gold with Danae, has surpassed the wildest imaginings of prurient chroniclers. All such tales are of necessity allegorical, yet though interesting chiefly to philosophers and historians, they still have their bearing upon medical antiquity.

JUNO, or HERA, both sister and wife of Jupiter, plays a very important part upon ancient medals, upon which, like Aesculapius and Hygeia, she is generally accompanied by the symbolic serpent. The protectress of marriage, — Juno Pronuba and J. Juga, — and, indeed, of women throughout their existence, she is said to have been fed by a young girl every year, and upon some coins, as of Lanurium, she appears as a maiden feeding the health-giving serpent. As the mother of Mars, Hebe, and Vulcan, she was considered the personification of maternity, and nearly everywhere was invoked as presiding over childbirth. One of her names was Hera Eileithuia, — Hastener of (obstetrical) Progress. A coin of Aigion commemorates her in this capacity. In this she must not be confounded with Lucina, the especial guardian of nativity. Thus the term "Juno Lucina," upon coins of the Younger Faustina and of Julia Domna, testifies to approaching or completed parturition, and aids in preserving a knowledge of their family life that historians would otherwise have lost. Upon a coin of Lucilla, Juno is called Lucerna, and bears a swathed infant upon her arm. Upon another, of Quintus Lucretius, there is the inscription J S M R (Juno Sospite Mater Romanorum). The device is a column upon which stands an infant holding a rod with on either side a she goat.¹ For a long time, instead of exposing feeble or sickly children in desert places to destroy them, the ancient Romans carried them to the Columna Lactaria, there to be fed with goat's milk. In this relation, Juno was often represented upon medals as clad in a mantle of goat's skin, and her name was then J. Caprotina, and for the same reason, during the festival of the Lupercalia, nude young men ran through the streets striking every woman with a thong of goat skin, with the view of preserving her from sterility. There seems a double reason for the employment of this animal's hide, — the one with reference to the employment of goat's milk for foundlings, and the other because the salacity of the goat typified the warmth of affection that women desire. History repeats itself, and in the eugenics craze of the present day, existing while there is a commensurate dislike of women to bear children, one finds a quite close analogue to the sexual frigidity so often suggested by devices and legends upon ancient medals. Upon medals of Gallus and Volusianus Juno is invoked in pestilence, perhaps as the ruler of the air between the sea and the clouds, since the plague was supposed to be from an atmospheric source. Her assistance may likewise have been sought because some derived her name from juvando, and therefore made her on the side of those in trouble. The great festival of Juno, the Matronalia, was celebrated at her temple upon the Capitoline. Juno was first represented upon the coins of the Flavii, and then upon those of several emperors and almost all the empresses.

LUCINA is often mentioned upon coins as dissociated from Juno. That the ancients had a number of deities interested in sexual matters is not surprising. Upon a coin of Crispina the dedication is to DIS GENITALIBVS, which corroborates this. It may be noted, as a gynecological aside, that certain functions were commemorated collectively rather than specially; thus the coin of Crispina just spoken of. Those of parentage are referred to upon the coin of Pertinax with DIS GENITORIBVS, and those of infant care, as in the coin with DIS NVTRITORES, or of wedlock, as in the coin with DIS CONJUGALIBVS.

APOLLO, son of Jupiter and Latona, twin brother of Diana, and father of Aesculapius, is supposed to derive his name from the Greek verb "to destroy," identified as he was with the sun god Helios and representing the deadly power of that luminary.² He was thought the enemy of the unjust and insolent, and although some have thought him the destroyer of mankind through pestilence,³ there are many reasons to think that he really aimed to eliminate disease, and that it was to this beneficial aspect of him that the many temples in his honor were erected. In his medical character, therefore, he is often represented with bow and arrows. When denoting the existence of pestilence a mouse was sometimes depicted as associated with him, destructive as this creature is of harvests, and therefore the precursor of famine and the pestilences that so often follow famine. Some of his names suggest his medical character, such as Apollon Alexikakos (Warder off of Ill Luck), and, more definitely, A. Iatros (Physician), on a coin of Apollonia Pontica, but more especially interesting in this connection, A. Smintheus (Killer of Mice), as on the coin of Alexandria Troas, with the inscription APOLLONOS SMINTHEOS, where he appears with bow and arrows and a dead mouse at his feet. This is especially noteworthy in view of the modern recognition of another rodent, the rat, as the direct conveyer of the plague. His temple at Alexandria Troas was built in gratitude for his destruction of mice during an epidemic of the plague, and mice were thereafter kept beneath the altar, fed in the sanctuary, and represented upon its coins. The locust, also causer of famine and consequent epidemics, appears on some coins associated with Apollo. He sometimes appears crowned with laurel. This refers to his having purified himself with laurel leaves after killing the Python, the guardian of the Oracle at Delphi, in revenge for its having pursued his mother, Latona, upon Mount Ida. This refers not only to the moral cleansing, but also to the fact that the sacred tripod at Delphi also represented numismatically, was sprinkled with swine's blood from a laurel branch by the Pythian priests. The laurel itself was very early known as having medicinal qualities, since music, associated with the laurel, was then considered, as now by many, as having medicinal virtue. A coin of Sinope has a statue of Apollo with in his hand what Sallet regards as a jar of ointment (Bern. No. 2), while a coin of Bizye (244 A.D.) shows Apollo before an omphalos upon which a serpent is coiled. Another of the same place shows Apollo with Aesculapius and Hygeia and Telesphorus.

As revealer of the future, Apollo might justly be regarded as the father of Prognosis. He was called Salutaris, or Conservator, upon coins of Trebonius Gallus and others. His worship as Salutaris was introduced from Greece into southern Italy by Philiscus of Rhodes, and into Rome by Pythagoras. Before this the Romans had doubtless consulted him at Delphi. His first temple in Rome was erected in 430 B.C. during an epidemic of plague. This was commemorated upon coins of Augustus of B.C. 12, and, indeed, upon family coins long before this. In a medical aspect he is depicted upon the coins of some thirty emperors running from C. Brutus to Julian II.

Under his title of SALUTARIS, Apollo was frequently invoked upon the Roman series, and the coins have as legend not only APOLLO SALUTARIS in the nominative as synonymous with Salutifer, but also APOLL. SALVTARI and APOL and APOLLINI. In two instances there is, ungrammatically, APOLLO

SALVTARI (Trebonianus and Valerianus), but in these two coins it is quite possible that the final s was lost by the wear of time. The following is a brief summary of the coins of Apollo: APOLLO SALVTARIS struck by Trebonianus Gallus in 251, and by Postumus in 259; APOLLO SALVTARI struck by Trebonianus and Valerianus in 253; APOLLINI SALVTARI struck by Trebonianus; and APOLL. SALVTARI struck by the same and by Volusianus in 251; APOL. SALVTARI struck by Trebonianus. In addition to the emblems already mentioned as accompanying, medically, Apollo upon ancient coins, he is also represented with the serpent Staff of Aesculapius, and here there can be little doubt that an epidemic of the plague was often referred to. As SALVTARIS, Apollo was invoked at the death of Volusianus in 254. He is also represented upon the coins of Constantinus Magnus in 306-311. With a military nation like Rome, battles were frequent, many bodies unburied, famine often prevailed, and as a result there was very general physical weakness and liability to infection. In the reign of Numa Pompilius shields were said to have fallen from heaven as a protection against the plague. Copies of these were kept in the temple of Mars, and they were represented upon denarii of P. Licinius Strabo, one of the moneyers of Augustus, and upon a second brass of Antoninus Pius of 140 A.D.

ARTEMIS of the Grecians and DIANA of the Romans was, like her brother Apollo, of distinctly medical importance. This is proven by some of her names, such as Doxeia, Protectrix of Births, and Eileithyia, — Hastener of (obstetrical) Progress. A coin of Pergamus of Commodus shows her standing beside Aesculapius. Another of her names was Paidotrophos (Caretaker of Children). She was considered the preserver from illness, the alleviator of suffering, and the guardian of female virginity, and yet, curiously enough, like Juno and Lucina, as the goddess of women in childbirth. In this, as in some other attributes, she was representative of the fruitfulness of Nature. Artemis at Ephesus was the personification of fructification, and she was represented upon a great many ancient as well as modern medals as having several breasts, — Ephesia Polymamma, — and with the lower portion of her body caged like a mummy in a sheath bearing mystic figures, as if to prevent fleshly congress. In this guise she is often spoken of as Isis Polymamma. She was herself supposed continent, and her priests were vowed to sexual abstinence. She was therefore in many respects the embodiment of surprising contradictions, and thus deservedly typical of all femininity. Though a protector from pestilence she was thought not to hesitate to afflict with deadly illness those of whom she did not approve, and her vengeance upon those straying from the paths of virtue was swift. Her bow, like that of Apollo, is in many instances suggestive of her aid in staying the progress of zymotic disease. As Lucifera! she appears on denarii of the Republic, and on the imperial coinage from Augustus to Claudius Gothicus.

ANCIENT MEDICAL MEDALS

ATHENA (Minerva) was, according to Pausanias, also called Hygeia, the reason being that there existed a statue of the goddess with a twisted serpent at her feet. It is now in the Vatican and is thought to have stood in the temple at Rome that was replaced by the Church of Santa Maria sopra Minerva. It has been depicted upon medals, and its appellation, Minerva Medica, has doubtless caused much unsatisfied questioning. Athena saved an eye to Tyrannus, in gratitude for which he erected a temple to her under the name of A. Ophthalmitis. She is very frequently represented upon coins.

ISIS, the chief female figure in Egyptian mythology, was sister and wife of Osiris. She was supposed to watch over the birth of children and to be the general guardian of Nature. Upon her statue was, "My veil no man has lifted. The fruit I bore was the sun." All that was good and beautiful was supposed to come from her. Gnechi, in his "Coin Types," says of her, "Isis made monetary appearance upon the small coins of Julian II, Helena, and Jovinus, and upon some medallions of Faustina the Younger. Isis is always represented with lotus flowers upon her head, except for a few times when one is held in her hand. Now she is represented seated suckling her son Horus, now upon the prow of a ship of which she holds the sail." As already said, she often is shown as a statue with many breasts, Isis Polymamma.

HERCULES. Of the various labors of Hercules, who had many medals, only two are of medical interest. The thirteenth, in which he is said to have met the wishes of no less than fifty women in a single night, would seem to point to a case of Priapism, though it may only typify a degree of virility far surpassing that of Thomas Parr of England, whose medal commemorates his having been placed in the stocks at the age of nearly a hundred and fifty on a charge of bastardy. The other labor is that of cleansing the Augean stables which might entitle his admission to this list as the first of hygienists. It must not be forgotten that one of the titles of Hercules was Diatrikos, or the Good Physician. His effigy occurs constantly upon ancient coins. He was the tutelary god of warm mineral springs, but as far as I know there is no coin extant with any reference to his medical aspect.

VENUS, typical of sexual affection, is found on many coins. Those with VENUS GENETRIX are probably the most interesting to physicians. One of them, as the Grecian Astarte and the Ashtaroth of the Phoenicians, is of Demetrius II, and bears the goddess surrounded by two rows of phalli.¹ Others are more suggestive of pregnancy achieved or completed, as a coin of Fortuna, where the goddess bears a swathed child with the effigies of Jupiter. One of Hadrian is supposed to represent the ungratified desire of his wife to become pregnant. Still others of the coins of Venus are of the most dignified and refined character. Among these is a medal of Caracalla and Plautilla bearing Aesculapius and the Cnidian Venus by Praxiteles. Many of these coins represent the goddess as chastely making the gesture with was the Grecian symbol of marriage, lifting by the raised right arm the drapery upon the shoulder from behind towards the head. Her girdle or Cestus was supposed to inspire the most ardent craving in all beholders, — a very early example of fetichism. Nude, semi-nude, or clothed, standing or seated, diademed and with sceptre and globe, she sometimes holds a dove, and is often accompanied by a Cupid or dolphin. Upon a number of coins she holds a poppy head in her hand. Renauldin mentions that this was thought by Lochner to allude to certain aphrodisiac virtues of the plant, and explains its employment here by the myth that when her husband, Vulcan, desired such indulgence, an opiate was given to Venus, and thinks this was to encourage conjugal reciprocation. It would seem more reasonable that it was either to deaden the physical suffering consequent upon the blacksmith's ardor, or to symbolize the usual feminine apathy upon such occasions, we having here the earliest reported case of relative disproportion, as compared with the zeal of the male, or to hint that the shades of night were more appropriate for such festivities than the glare of day. On a coin of Cos we find Aphrodite on one side and Aesculapius on the other. Venus appears on the coinage of the Roman Republic, upon that of many emperors until Saloninus, and upon that of most of the empresses.

SILENUS, the much beloved of ancient drunkards, may be mentioned, as he occurs on some Greek coins. Good wine was highly esteemed as a remedial agent. While he no longer appears on modern medals, his verisimilitude, seated upon a barrel, not of old Falernian but of whiskey straight, could some years ago be seen in many a saloon in this country.

PLUTO in connection with PERSEPHONE, his wife, were gods of healing as well as rulers of the World of Shades. There was a celebrated Plutonion at Acharaka, a ground plan of which is shown on a coin of Gallienus (Bern. No. 158).

DIONYSOS, or BACCHUS, also had medical attributes. On a coin of Septimus Severus we see the god, with standing behind him the figure of Aesculapius. Here, again, the medicinal value of good wine is emphasized.

BAALZEBUB, God of Flies, might also be mentioned. He is referred to on coins of Syria and of Phoenicia. The Plague of Flies was and is to this day a very real thing in many Eastern countries. The inhabitants of Cyrene made sacrifice to the god Achro to be delivered from flies.¹

CHIRON, the Centaur, in whose care the young Aesculapius is said to have been placed, was a renowned healer. Pupil of Artemis and Apollo, he was represented in the company of the latter on coins of Gallienus, perhaps invoked for his aid during an epidemic of the plague. In the interesting chapter on the Genesis of English Medicine in Mr. Wellcome's "Anglo-Saxon Leechcraft,"

ANCIENT MEDICAL MEDALS

Chiron is represented as handing a book and medicinal plants to Aesculapius, who is trampling upon his own serpent.

Two other early medical demigods should be mentioned, — AMPHIARAOS and his son AMPHILOCHOS. Both preceded Aesculapius and were worshipped at Thebes, Oropus, and Athens. A coin of Oropus of Gallienus shows us Amphiaraos, while Amphilochos appears upon a coin of Tarsus (Bern. No. 12).

The DIOSCURI were often called upon in sickness. They appear on many Roman coins.

PRIAPUS, son of Aphrodite and Dionysus, was recognized upon ancient coins as the promoter of fertility, or rather, as both his parents were inebriate at his begetting, as the patron of sexual license at its extreme. Upon some of his coins he is depicted in a condition suggestive of an immediate discharge of seminal fluid. There is a medal representing Priapus worshipped by two nude females. The extended use of his symbol, the phallus, by Roman women was much commented upon by the old writers.

Aesculapius founded a notable dynasty of physicians, the Aesculapiades, who must now be mentioned. First, however, comes his wife, EPIONE, whose medical powers are hinted at by her name, which means Reliever of Pain. A coin of Epidaurus, 300 B.C., shows Epione carrying a basin, with in the field a cupping glass.

Chief among the Aesculapiades was HYGEIA, daughter of Aesculapius, and the especial goddess of healing. She appears with great frequency upon ancient coins. The serpent almost always accompanies her. The cup or chalice from which it feeds contained what has been called in modern times the Elixir of Life. It is rather amusing that certain modern medallists have mistaken this chalice, or patera, for a lamp, and even lighted it, thus giving us the serpent feeding on whatever the ancients used for illumination. Upon a medal of Sonder, Hygeia is represented as feeding the serpent from her own breast. Hygeia was also called Soteria (Saviour). Pausanias stated that her first statue was erected at Olympia by a father in gratitude for the recovery of his son. As the tutelary goddess of Metapontum, a region where malaria is prevalent, this appellation is appropriate for its coins, and that the head of Persephone also appears is doubtless because she was goddess of the seasons, and therefore causative of the intense vegetation that is characteristic of a rich paludial soil.

SALUS, a Sabine prototype of Hygeia, was invoked and worshipped by the Romans as a separate goddess. Upon coins of the Aemilian Gens she was called DEA VALETUDINIS. While her name is found upon many coins, it is often used merely in a political sense, signifying that peace prevailed, and that the State was safe. Thus the legend SALVS PROVINCIARVM or SALVS EXERCITVI or SALVS MILITVM may have chronicled treaties, successful battles, or that by well-planned preparations the danger of a hostile invasion had been averted, or merely that the troops were in good temper. SALVS GENERI HVMANI, upon a medal of Caracalla, was accompanied by Hygeia raising a sick person, the medical interest here being very direct. Upon certain coins Salus was cleverly copied from Minerva, but without her helmet, and the serpent of Erichthonus changed to that of Aesculapius. Conversely, I have shown that the Minerva Medica upon coins was merely a reproduction of Hygeia. Sometimes, when representing merely prosperity, Salus was styled SALVS PVBLICA or S. ROMANA. Invoked by farmers when sowing their grain, Salus evidenced a full harvest. When used upon imperial coins Salus generally refers to the health of the ruler, and this especially after illness. In this sense the word was one of the earliest symbols, and was used from the time of the Republic. Under the first emperors Hygeia also appeared. Upon some medals of the empresses the term is even more definite. Thus with Livia, the daughter of Augustus, then called Julia, SALVS AVGVSTAE is employed. Sometimes her head alone appears, but more generally the full figure, seated, standing, or leaning against a column, generally feeding her serpent, either in her arms or hanging from a tree or twined around an altar. Sometimes the emblem was less precise, being that of Pietas or others, such as a patera poured upon a burning altar, to signify that health is the gift of the goddess. When ears of corn appear they are the emblems of Annona, signifying that after famine the importation of grain was the first step towards restoring the public health. While under the emperors Salus generally refers to physical health at times, it was employed in a wholly Christian sense, as on more modern coins, and as on a coin of Olybius with SALVS MUNDI around a cross. Still more recently instances have been suggestive, as in the medal with the legend SALVS, where a nude female is represented between rocks against which she presses herself as if in phallic worship. Antaeus, regaining his strength by renewed contact with the earth, seems the only alternative.

Further, as to the coins of Salus, notwithstanding the opinion that "in spite of her resemblance to the Greek goddess of Health, Hygeia, she always retained her own personality tolerably distinct as the patroness of material prosperity, the upholder of the Roman State, and protectress of the sacred person of the emperor"¹, Salus is found with either of Hygeia's emblems, — the serpent and patera of divination, or both, and the opinion now advanced is confirmed by the fact that during an epidemic of the plague that occurred B.C. 100, the Sybilline books "command the presentation of gifts to Salus, in union with Apollo and Aesculapius."

PANAKEA (All Healer), sister of Hygeia, sometimes, though rarely, appears on coins.

More important are the three sons of Aesculapius.

MACHAOS (Eager for Battle) is the tutelary god of surgeons. When Paris was wounded at the siege of Troy, Machaos was hastily sent for, and, according to Homer, sucked out the wound and dressed it with a salve that had been imparted to Aesculapius by Chiron. Possibly his name may be derived from macheira, a knife, though this is very doubtful. Upon a coin of Tricca, Machaos appears as a warrior.

PODALEIROS (The White-footed One), also named the Fleet from his haste to answer sick calls, was concerned chiefly with Diagnosis and Internal Medicine. To him was it given to recognize the Unseen and to cure the Impossible (Bernhard). He diagnosed the madness of Ajax. These two Aesculapiades appear upon the elaborate medals of the Royal College of Surgeons of London. More recently they have been depicted upon the Wellcome medal of the Association of Military Surgeons of the United States.

The third son, TELESOPHROS, frequently appears on ancient medals. He generally stands beside his father, cloaked and wearing a conical little cap. His presence upon a medal is supposed to signify the fact that convalescence had set in. He appears on coins of Nikaia, Perperene (Bern. No. 130), Pergamon (Bern. No. 129 and 155, 131, 133), and Bizye (Bern. No. 134).

IANISKOS (The Healer) was another of the Aesculapiades. He is always represented as a naked youth and appears on coins of Bizye (Bern. No. 134), Pergamon (Bern. Nos. 135, 136, 137), and Laodiceia (Bern. No. 138).

Besides all these demigods we have medals of certain virtues, attributes or characteristics personified that have distinct medical relationships.

VALETUDO would seem to affirm that the emperor, with relation to whom it is employed, was an acute or chronic invalid.

PUDICITIA would suggest that the empress who applied it to herself was perhaps disinclined to marriage or maternity. (On the other hand, the editor would suggest that it was employed by the emperor as a tribute to the modesty of his consort, though in all probability the tribute was quite undeserved in some cases if Gibbon tells us the truth.) The legend seems to have been used by several emperors after the death of their wives. Pudicitia, according to Livy, was first worshipped in Rome in 296 B.C. She frequently appears on the coins of the empresses, Plotina (98 A.D.) being the first to use the device. Eight of the emperors used her. In several of these cases we cannot decide beyond a certain point as to the significance. Stephenson, perhaps in view of the universal license of those days, seems to think that the presentation of Pudicitia upon imperial coins, whether of men or women, was "inappropriate ostentation," if not a mistake of the moneyers by using an accidental mule. Her figure is usually alone, though upon certain medallions is accompanied by Abundantia, Felicitas, or Securitas.

FORTUNA MULIERBRIS, upon coins of Faustina Junior, wife of Marcus Aurelius, was justly employed, if all contemporary account be true. It indicated all of joy or sorrow that is the lot of the daughters of men. Festus speaks of a statue of this goddess at the fourth milestone from Rome. It was forbidden to be touched by any woman who had been married more than once.

FOECVNDITAS is upon the coins of most of the empresses from Faustina Senior to Salonina. That she is mentioned but by two emperors, Gallienus and Claudius Gothicus, is not to be taken that their wives were infecund, either always or merely in wedlock. It represented the opposite of sterility, accompanied, as was often the case upon the coin, by a varying number of children with their mother, thus indicating whether the lady in question was a primipara or not. As the date of emission of many of these Roman coins is known, by means of it we thus can decide the date of the birth of various members of the family where otherwise history is silent. In this regard the statement of certain antiquarians that the number of children represented is merely allegorical seems unreasonable. Sometimes Foecunditas signifies merely public prosperity. Some coins bearing FOECVNDITAS TEMPORVM have Tellus, the earth, surrounded by four children. On the other hand, a coin of Julia Domna, wife of Severus, shows us the empress nursing Geta, while Caracalla stands at her feet.

UBERTAS, the personification of Fertility, appears intermittently from Trajanus Decius to Constantine. A female is represented with cornucopia and flowers, or with a bunch of grapes or a cow's udder.

As verging upon Medical Jurisprudence, it may be permitted to mention the coins of the Tituria Gens representing the Rape of the Sabine women and certain coins representing the Rape of Proserpine by Pluto. While in these coins the word rape may mean only carrying off, that certainly is not the case on the coins of Naxos and other Greek cities where we see an ichthyophallic satyr bearing away in his arms a somewhat reluctant nymph. Several classical amours that painters have made famous are depicted upon coins. The escape of Leda with Zeus, and that of the Cretan series, where Britomartis, a wood nymph, is impregnated by Minos under the guise of an eagle, and that of Europa, escaping with Jupiter as a bull, are cases in point. Their true allegorical or religious character has been most learnedly shown by M. Svoronos.

An interesting medical coin depicts Dejanera, wife of Hercules, and her amour with Nessus, who was slain by her injured husband with a poisoned arrow. Upon her steeping his garment in the centaur's blood it is said to have clung to his person with such virulence that its removal tore away the flesh also, and that the consequent suffering caused him to destroy himself.

Lying-in is represented upon a number of coins, among them one of Antoninus Pius, showing the accouchement of Faustina Senior, and concerning which many difficult questions have arisen. The empress is being confined, with an old man kneeling, waiting to receive the child; attendants are playing upon pipes and tambourines, either in joy at the delivery, lamentation at the suffering that was inevitable before the days of anaesthesia, or to drive away evil influences.¹ Birago, however, declares that it cannot be Faustina who is represented, as she was already dead, it being the third year of the consulship of Antoninus. Can it not be, however, that Faustina died in childbirth, and that this was what was chronicled upon the medal? Akin to such medals, though in a different sense, seem to be certain pieces connected with ancient Jewish history. They represent Lilith, thought by the Talmudists to have been created for Adam before the birth of Eve, and supposed to have been forever roaming through the night seeking for sexual companionship. She was supposed, through jealousy, to be very dangerous to women during parturition. To avert her desire to destroy infants, these medals are said to have been placed as amulets in the lying-in chamber.²

Lactation was frequently represented upon ancient coins. Romulus and Remus, with their foster mother, the she wolf, the emblem of Rome, constantly appears, as on the denarii of Sextus Pompeius and the Pompeian and Terentian gentes. Children upon a mother's breast are often depicted. A cow with her calf and a sow with its farrow are other instances. Barthelemy mentions a coin with a child nursing a hound.³ A portion of these ancient coins are without doubt allegorical or with a religious meaning, as were perhaps even those representing the pudenda, the male as in certain coins already referred to, or the female, surrounded by the cysta mistica, as in the tetradrachm of Eleusis.⁴ One would hardly think this could be said of Spintrian and Salarian coins, entrance tickets to brothels, but this may not be unlikely to have been the case. At any rate, such coins, or rather tesserae, or tokens, exist, with locating figures. On one of them is a representation of the interior of a house of assignation, while the reverse bears the numeral VIII, being either the number of the woman or of the cubicle she occupied. Generally they bear a representation of coitus in some unnatural position.

Very different from what I have been describing, but yet a portion of them properly to be included among medical medals, are those commemorating prayers for imperial safety. When the legend is within a laurel wreath, or upon a shield held by one or two victories, or by a small genius, the prayer or offering is because of a successful battle, and the legend is variously worded, as VOTA OPTATA, V. SVSCEPTA, V. PVBLICA, V. FELICIA, V. ROMANORVM, V. DECENNALIA, V. VIGENNALIS, V. ORBIS, V. CAESARIS, etc., or simply VOTA, followed by progressive Roman numerals, and where any of these legends accompany the emperor sacrificing, the medal is almost always of a military character. Where, however, as in one of Augustus, the legend reads PROV-(identia) VALETVDINE CAESARIS, or in another of Gallienus, OB CONSERVA-

ANCIENT MEDICAL MEDALS

TIONEM SALVTIS, there can be no doubt whatever that very serious illness is deprecated, or that recovery therefrom is hailed with gratitude.

There are many ancient coins and medals commemorative of Epidemics. So far as has been ascertained, these have mainly been of the plague. Their existence is proved indirectly, as when chronicling famine and the like, and also more exactly, as the one pre-eminent visitation of those times. During the years between 250 and 265 A.D. the whole Roman empire seems to have been affected, as shown by the coins of Gallus and Gallienus. Its course was traced by St. Cyprian and Eusebius. Though Pfeiffer and Ruland in their most excellent book say much concerning modern epidemics, they refer in only the scantiest way to those of ancient times.

Every medical man would be interested, had I space to continue this research into ancient medical history. I have already referred to the occurrence of a mouse upon the medals of Apollo Smintheus as indicating the existence of Famine, and probably the occurrence of Plague as an indirect result. More can be said on this point. The coins of Pergamon for a very long period had representations of the god of healing. Two or three of these, struck by Lucius Verus, gave also at the feet of Aesculapius a small animal which was at first supposed to be a sow, rooting with its snout,¹ with reference, perhaps, to the discovery of the medicinal springs at Pergamon by this animal, as has since then been clearly represented by a rooting wild boar upon two modern medals of Teplitz, those springs having been thus discovered. What was thought to be a wild boar on the coins of Pergamon has since then been discovered, however, to be a mouse gnawing at an article of food.² Now, the mouse does not occur elsewhere upon the Aesculapian coins, while it does upon those of Apollo when considered as the destroyer of those pests of agriculture. The ancients recognized the prevalence of mouse, or rat, famines, of which in modern numismatics there are many illustrations. Strabo, for instance, stated that in Spain the great multitude of rats there occasioned pestilential diseases. What, then, is more likely than that the coin of Pergamon bearing a rat or mouse gnawing food at the feet of Aesculapius, instead of merely referring to some mystic rites, as supposed by Wroth, in reality directly records as an historical fact that between the years 166 to 169 A.D. there was an outbreak of the plague in the Province of Mysia occasioned by the failure of the harvest through its destruction by rats or field mice.³ The mouse upon an ear of barley appears upon the coins of Metapontum. The application of similar reasoning to what are generally considered meaningless symbols upon ancient coins unlocks an entirely new and unsuspected treasury of history, and thus may eventually recover, through the attainment of new facts and the corroboration given to obscure passages in ancient authors, the sanitary and medical records, till now very imperfect or lost, of ancient Greece and Rome.

As to ancient hospitals, sanatoria, and other health resorts, I have already spoken of the temples of Aesculapius which were to all intents hospitals or rather clinics. The coins of Himera in Sicily before 482 B.C. bear a cock, the usual sacrifice to Aesculapius. The Rev. Dr. Scott has shown that this referred to its hot mineral springs, still much resorted to. In 308 B.C. the city was destroyed by an earthquake, and the coins of its successor bear the legend THERMITAN from these Thermae. Such springs were resorted to for the internal use of the waters, bathing, or the mild and equable climate that naturally obtains in such a neighborhood. To the present day, as I myself have shown,¹ many invalids from Naples are carried to the hot mud springs at Pozzuoli, merely to breathe their strongly medicinal exhalations.

A coin of Himera has the nymph Himera holding a basin over an altar. Beside her stands Silenus with his feet in a basin before a fountain, allowing a douche of water to cascade upon his chest from a lion's mouth.

There are many coins referring to baths, such as the one of Severus on which appears the Baths of Caracalla.

Athletics certainly are of medical interest, if only as ensuring a mens sana in corpore sano, and there are many numismatic references to them.

A coin of Pergamon, 31 B.C., shows a washing basin with the legend GYMNASIARCHON. A Gymnasiarch was the manager of a gymnasium. Another of Anazarbos, of 98 A.D., shows a Gymnasiarch standing before a basin with the similar legend.

That the ancients thoroughly appreciated the importance to health of a pure water supply is shown by many medals. One of Septimus of Carthage shows Cybele seated on a lion with water gushing from a rock (Bern. No. 221). Another of Hadrianopolis of the same emperor shows a Nymphaeum, or temple, where pure water was free to all, with below Neptune leaning on a vessel from which spurts a copious flow. Of the many aqueducts in Rome we have ample illustrations. Denarii struck by the Martia Gens show the Aqua Maria. Others commemorative of the restoration of the same aqueduct by Trajan have the legend AQVA TRAIANA. The Aqua Campeia and a Nymphaeum with the Fountain of Severus are also shown. Others represent the carrying away of water, or drainage, while still others are of actual sewage, as that of the denarius of L. Mussilius Longus, with a representation of the Cloaca Maxima, the Great Sewer of Rome, with the legend CLOACINA, the tutelary goddess of the same. The advantages of draining superfluous water from the soil, both for agricultural and for health purposes, was well recognized. Both Greeks and Romans show by their coins how well they appreciated the value of preventing and eradicating disease by removing not merely stagnant water, but also subsoil collections of it. Some of the coins of Selinus in Sicily (480 B.C.) show this exceedingly well. Selinus was surrounded by marshes and suffered from malaria to a great extent. According to Diogenes Laertes many died, and the women bore children with difficulty (τας γυναίκας δυστοκειν). In 450 B.C. Empedocles hit upon the happy idea of throwing the two rivers of the place, the Selinus and the Hypsus, into one, thus creating a stream of some rapidity and so draining the marshes. Two superb coins show this —

- Ob. Hercules subduing a bull, symbolic of the river god of the stagnant waters.
- Rev. The river god Hypsus sacrificing to Aesculapius while to right is seen a Wild Celery leaf, the emblem of Selinus, and a marsh bird slinking away in disgust at the destruction of its home.
- Ob. Selinus sacrificing to Aesculapius. To right a bull and celery leaf.
- Rev. Apollo, killer of the demons of Pestilence, in a biga, shooting health-giving arrows into the sun's rays, while Artemis drives his chariot.

Similar are coins of Hadrian on the drainage of Lake Fucinus. Here a farm laborer stands upon a pump whose top he holds. The legend is TELLVS STABIL. A coin of Trajan with female, with wheel and reed in her hand, commemorated the building of the Via Traiana by which a portion of the Pontine Marshes was drained. There are many medals bearing river gods with flowing urns. A portion of these doubtless merely commemorate battles and other events in the vicinity of streams. Others, I am convinced, have reference to engineering operations more or less directly affecting the public health.

One of the causes of pestilence may well be regarded to be the occurrence of earthquakes, frequent in Sicily and southern Italy, and at times in Greece. Harvests were destroyed, and general demoralization and starvation were the consequence. An instance is the coin commemorating the destruction by earthquake of Paphos in Cyprus. Sidereal disturbances, such as eclipses, etc., caused much illness and even death through fright. Therefore astronomers and even general physicists were classed with augurs and aruspices. The appearance of comets was especially looked to for aid in the presence of epidemics; on the other hand, they were dreaded in ordinary times, and their presence largely prevented agricultural operations, hence famine and the conditions favorable for pestilence. Comets were often regarded as associated with the death of eminent men, such as the Sidus Julium held responsible for the death of Julius Caesar.

Ancient famines played a very important part in medical history, and reference is made to them upon many coins. The legends ANNOVA, A. PVBLICA, CONCIARIVM, ALIMENTA were used to indicate that the harvest had been poor, the price of food high, and an epidemic accordingly present or threatened, just as, on the other hand, the legends COPIA, VBERTAS, ABVNDANTIA denoted abundant crops and a low mortuary list. As already shown, the famine coins undoubtedly represent the importation of grain into Athens and Rome from their colonies, or a general distribution of foodstuffs from the national or imperial granaries. In the later years of the Republic grain was sold cheaply to the poor in times of scarcity, having been previously stored up in the government storehouses. Under the emperors, it was not merely gratuitously distributed, but given as pay for regular, or reward for exceptional, services. Often upon the coins there is but the representation of a female, or more than one, with a cornucopia; at other times merely this emblem alone; at others, but a sheaf of wheat; or again, but a single ear of wheat, perhaps accompanied by a poppy capsule, representing, possibly, the stupor of repletion. The poppy, we are told by Pliny, was sown as an offering to Ceres. Sometimes this goddess is represented as holding a cornucopia upright, to signify that the grain is not to be wasted, or she delivers it to Equity to distribute, who stands at her side with her scales and the hasta pura or pointless spear. If the prow of a ship, a rudder, or an oar appears it shows that the grain came from overseas. Upon consular coins of Ceres, from Julius Caesar to Caracalla, bearing a plow, ears of grain, or cornucopias, there is often a torch, to indicate her search by night for her daughter Proserpina, carried away by Pluto, the coins being thus of a double interest to physicians, as suggesting also a pathological libido.

Just as the field-mouse famines mentioned upon ancient coins have been shown as deserving attention, so also are those occasioned by destructive insects. It has occurred to me that certain coins of Metapontum present a record of famines and are therefore the earliest of the series. These coins have on them an ear of barley. Upon certain ones of them there is an addition, — the Eastern locust (Locusta migratoria, Linn.), possibly named for the female professional assassin at Rome, whom Juvenal mentions as having ridden many a wife of her husband, and by Tacitus long reckoned as among the instruments of government, having been employed by Agrippa to poison the Emperor Claudius. The grain ear is sometimes shown as full, and at others as completely stripped, referring, apparently, to lean years. Lenormant thought that the original name of Metapontum, Alytus, meant malaria, and he described the condition of the place before drainage. He thence conjectured that the word became symbolical with that of the locust. There is another query that I would submit concerning the coins of Metapontum. Several that have the ear of barley have also upon them another insect than the locust, which is clearly dipterous. Possibly it may be the wheat fly of Europe (Cacidomyia tritici, Kirby), and therefore of the famine series. It more closely resembles the common house fly (Musca domestica, Linn.), and then would doubtless commemorate a plague like that of Egypt. This would be a wholly new addition to the numismatics of epidemics. Thus, again, it is shown that the study of numismatics opens up questions not only of medicine and its practitioners,

but of natural history and of comparative anatomy as well as of animal and vegetable physiology.¹

A word as to the drugs appearing upon ancient coins. The POPPY, sacred to Demeter as having diminished her pain at the sight of the Rape of her daughter Persephone, appears on coins of Ankyra and of Domitia, 81 A.D.

The SILPHIUM, the emblem of Cyrene, was a much praised remedy for all manner of ills, but especially for female complaints, — dystocia, suppressed menstruation, abortion, hysteria and paralysis, to induce perspiration and as a diuretic, in digestive and bladder disturbances, in consumption and intermittent fever, in passive congestion and fistulas (Pliny). In veterinary disease it was used for colic and distention and arthritis (Theophrastus). I am quoting this from Bernhard. It was the chief article of export of Cyrene. Its modern name is Narthex Asafoetida Falconer.

The POMEGRANATE was of old a favorite remedy for worms, and was also used in Gynecology. It appears on a coin of Sidon (Bern. No. 227).

The LILY was used in Gynecology, especially for faulty menstruation. It appears on a coin of Syria (Bern. No. 228).

STORAX appears on coins of Selge. According to Pliny it was of great value as a balsam, and also was a favorite remedy for respiratory disease and for a tight os uteri. It helped menstruation and softened the lower abdomen. Melancholia is helped by it. Poured into the ears all ringing disappears, and by its use goitre and knotty tendons can be cured.

Bernhard has pointed out two other ancient coins of distinct medical interest. The first concerns Ephialtes, the Incubus of Claustrophobia. This bearded, goat-footed, tailed figure was also called Epopheles, the Helper, and Soronos of Ephesus, practising in Rome about 110 A.D., saw in its appearance favorable omens. Oreibasios, Court Physician to Julian the Apostate, 283 A.D., said, "The so-called Ephialtes is no evil spirit, but rather, on the one hand, a grave illness, and on the other, a holy announcer of the will of the gods and a servant of Aesculapius."² The daemon appears on coins of Nikaia and Ankyra, one bearing the inscription "The inhabitants of Nikaia honor Ephialtes Epopheles."

Philoktetes, the best archer of the Greeks (Homer), was bitten by a serpent as the Greeks sacrificed before the altar of Apollo at Tenedos. The wound would not heal and stank so evilly that his companions could not endure the stench, and also his cries of pain distracted the worshippers. Accordingly, under orders from Agamemnon, Odysseus placed Philoktetes, together with the bow of Heracles, which he owned, upon the island of Lemnos. In the tenth year of the Siege of Troy he was brought back to that city, it appearing that it could not be taken until the bow of Heracles returned. After his return the aid of Machaon was invoked and the wound promptly healed. Philoktetes then shot Paris with an arrow, whereupon the city promptly fell. A coin of Lamia, 400 B.C., shows the wounded hero with leg outstretched and with his right hand upon his head as if in pain (Bern. No. 223).

Delirium Tremens is shown on a coin of Alexandria (Egypt) of Antoninus Pius, on which we see Lykurgus murdering his family. The story runs that when Lykurgus denied the divinity of Dionysus, that God condemned him to drink a stupifying wine, and in his delirium he killed his wife and son. The coin shows Lykurgus between two grapevines at one of which he aims a blow with an axe. His half-dressed wife is evidently about to be struck by the axe, while the son of Lykurgus vainly attempts to restrain his father's fury by seizing his shoulder (Bern. No. 234).

I will now give a list of the ancient men connected with medicine and allied sciences, who are commemorated upon medals, either ancient or modern. As the medals will be fully described in their proper places, in alphabetical order, in the Personal List, I shall not describe them here.

ACILIUS. Rome. Physician.

AESCULAPIUS.

ALCMAEON. Lived about 600 B.C. at Crotona. Anatomist and pupil of Pythagoras.

ANDROCLUS. Slave. That not merely royalty, but its extreme opposite, has been appreciated numismatically is shown by the medal of the Medical Faculty of the Carolina University at Lund, on which Androclus is depicted as extracting the thorn from the foot of a lion. There is also a medal of the Edinburgh Veterinary School with the same device.

ARCHIMEDES (287-212 B.C.). Syracuse. Some seventeen modern medals of this physicist and general scientist will be described. I believe there are no ancient medals in his honor.

ARETAEUS (circa 50 A.D.). Cappadocia. Physician. His name is on the medal of the Medico-Chirurgical Faculty of Ferrara.

ARISTOTLE (384-322 B.C.). Athens. Wrote on many medical topics.

ASKLEPIADES. Physician at Bithynia, 100 B.C. Practised at Rome also.

ATTALUS. Heracles in Ionia. Physician.

CELSUS, AULUS CORNELIUS (27 B.C. to 14 A.D.). Rome. Medical writer. See medals of Cruz and Mendoza.

CHIRON. Centaur renowned for medical skill. See medals of Boudin and Theden.

GALEN, CLAUDIUS (130-201 A.D.). Physician at Pergamus and Rome.

HEROPHILUS (circa 300 B.C.). Physician of Alexandria.

HIPPARCHUS (150 B.C.). Nicaea, Bithynia. His name appears on coins of Antoninus Pius and Alexander Severus.

ANCIENT MEDICAL MEDALS

HIPPOCRATES (460-357 B.C.). Cos. Physician.

MOSES. Judaea. Sanitarian.

MUSA, ANTONIO (circa 40 B.C.). Rome. Physician. See medal of Academy of Ferrara.

PHILIPPUS. Physician of Alexander the Great. Mentioned on medal of Dr. Joseph Philip.

SOLON. Lawgiver.

THALES (636-546 B.C.). Miletus. Astronomer and scientist.

XENOPHON. Cos. Physician to the emperor Claudius.

In editing this essay upon Ancient Medical Medals, written by Dr. Storer in 1916, to which I have largely added, I have found a wealth of information in the excellent monograph by Dr. O. Bernhard of St. Moritz, entitled "Griechische und Römische Münzbilder in ihren Beziehungen zur Geschichte der Medizin," and from it I have abundantly quoted.

PERSONAL MEDALS

NOTE. — Owing to the transitory character of political divisions, especially in these latter days, and the tendency of medical men to migrate from one country to another, the editor has arranged the Personal Medals of all countries alphabetically. When there are several medals of one man they are arranged alphabetically according to the first letter of the inscription on the reverse; when there is no inscription on the reverse they are arranged according to size. With some hesitation the editor has included the medals and tokens of "Irregulars" with the other personal medals.

A star (*) after a number means that the medal is in the collection of the Boston Medical Library.

Rev. A hand grasping a surgical instrument and a vine with cluster of grapes. 62 mm. Bronze. 313. 136-565. As to the significance of RO, Moehsen suggested that it was Rogerius of Salerno, or Robertus; Duisburg considers it Romanus; while Rudolphi distinctly charges that Moehsen caused the medal to be made as a joke upon medical antiquarians. Moehsen's own description of it, however, seems to invalidate such a supposition, and the idea is at variance with the general character of his work. The most probable solution would seem to be that the doubtful word is either ROMA, ROGLIANO, RONCIGLIONE, ROSSANO, ROVEREDO, or ROVIGO, and, most likely, the first of them.

BOYLSTON, Ward Nicholas (1748-1828) Boston, Mass., U. S. A. Founder of medal of Harvard Medical School.

- 468* Ob. W · N · BOYLSTON SCHOLÆ MEDICINÆ FVNDATOR rosette. Bust to left. Below, W · WYON SC :
Rev. Blank. 45 mm. Bronze. Gilt. Tin. Founded in 1821, but discontinued after a few years, as it was felt that the inscription might cause the impression that Boylston was the founder of the school rather than of the medal. It is not to be confounded with the Boylston medal for Elocution of Harvard University, which was founded by Boylston's son, a physician of the same name.
- 469* Ob. As the last, but FAVOR in place of FVNDATOR.
Rev. Blank. 45 mm. Bronze. Substituted for the preceding in 1914.

PERSONAL MEDALS

This mysterious medal requires unusual attention. In the American Journal of Numismatics for January, 1891, I described the medal, and stated that Dr. Gurdon Buck was the lecturer. In this it would seem that I had been misinformed. Previously, Dr. Alfred H. Buck had informed me that the representations, beginning at the left, were of Drs. Gouverneur M. Smith, D. B. St. John Roosa, J. B. Tuthill, Gurdon Buck, Robert F. Weir, Alfred North, and Normand Smith, and said that this enumeration was corroborated by the secretary of the college, Dr. John G. Curtis. Fifteen years subsequently, Dr. Roosa wrote me that he had consulted Mr. John S. Browne, Librarian of the Academy of Medicine, who was equally interested in the matter. "Thanks to Dr. Weir," he said, "who with Dr. A. H. Smith and myself, appear to be the only survivors of this group, all the faces except one are now recalled and named. Dr. Fred Sturgis is not Dr. F. R. Sturgis, now of New York, but a Dr. Sturgis who was an officer of the Pacific mail steamers. I am myself not a graduate of the college. There is a large copy in the Board Room of the college with Dr. S. in it, though the following is the list finally adopted for the medal; Drs. John C. Acheson, Fred Sturgis, Andrew H. Smith, D. B. St. John Roosa, S. B. Tuthill, Gurdon Buck, D. B. Miller, Robert F. Weir, Alfred North, and Normand Smith."

In 1918 Dr. Weir wrote me, "I had a large copy of the second photograph taken, which furnished the group for the medal, and in which I posed for Dr. Buck, House Surgeon. In a previous photograph, which proved unsatisfactory, Dr. Hull was the House Surgeon. This may have caused some confusion in the minds of those whom you have consulted, and I think I have designated the names of the individuals thereon portrayed. I know Dr. G. M. Smith was not of the number."

Although Dr. Weir has stated that he himself was the lecturer, it remains a mystery why Dr. Roosa, though not a graduate, was portrayed. Medals are usually regarded as the most reliable records of history.

The above proves that they are not always to be relied upon.

Society of Marseilles (No. 7123). The only explanation of this mule is that in the excitement of the French Revolution, which to a certain extent communicated itself to London, Marseilles being at that time a very hotbed of political unrest, possession of a die from that city, however unconnected with the question of the moment, had been made use of towards increasing the popular agitation.

Dr. Kane also received the Queen's Medal to Arctic Explorers, the Founder's medal of the Royal Geographical Society in 1856, and the gold medal of the Société de Géographie of Paris in 1858.
- The Arctic medal, with the ships "Advance" and "Rescue" in the ice, given to the officers of the first Grinnell Expedition in 1851 by the British residents of New York, is often admitted to the Kane series. It in reality commemorates Lieutenant De Haven, commander of the expedition, and besides, the names of the recipients are merely engraved.

Dr. Le Rous thus explains his coat of arms: "The gold cross is the emblem of my creed; in gules because red is the noblest color. The three bees on azure mean obstinate work. The lamp is the collector's sign, and Mercury's rod and the wreath on gules are a copy of the decoration I was awarded by Laval University." The doctor, however, here committed a grievous error, for on the arms of Laval is the staff of Aesculapius and not the wand of Mercury, God of Thieves.

PARACELSUS, Dr. Aurelius Philipp Theophrastus Bombastes von Hohenheim (1493–1541) Basle, Switzerland.

- 2696 Ob. Bust, with, below, the monogram of Albrecht Dürer.
Rev. In laurel wreath, engraved, EFFIGIES AUREOLI THEOPHRASTI AB HOHENHEIM AETATIS SVÆ XLVII. 75 mm. Copper. Cast and subsequently tooled by an engraver. Weight, 11½ ounces. Struck in 1540. 313. 120/498. The engraved reverse could not be by Dürer, as he had died twelve years previously to 1540. It probably was done under the direction of Dr. Moehsen of Berlin, about 1790. See No. 2703.
- 2697 Ob. DE · THEOPHRASTI · - PARACELSI · Æ · 45. Bust, facing.
Rev. MORTIS (sic) SALISBORGENSEI A° 1541. Arms. 36 mm. Silver. Cast. 203. XI. p. 369.
- 2698 Ob. As last, save D · THEOPHRASTI.
Rev. As last, save SALISBURGENSI and ANNO. 39 mm. Silver. Lead. Pachinger, 292/1. In Pachinger's figure the bust is turned slightly to the right, the frill is at neck, the amulet upon breast, and the left hand holding some obscure object, with the right beneath.
- 2699 Ob. THEOPHRASTI - PARACELSI · Æ · 34. Bust. Near left cheek, an indistinct coat of arms.
Rev. NATVS - / A° R · S · MCC / CC / DENAT A° MCCC --- (roughly engraved). 65 mm. Lead. Cast. 255. 1911, Apr. 290/3. Probably a reproduction of an older medal. Struck in 1527.

PERSONAL MEDALS

- Rev. Above, in antique letters, OPTIMO – MAXIMO Aesculapius, erect, nude, with both hands leaning on staff. 32 mm. Copper. Bronze. Pachinger, No. 4.
- 2702 Ob. VIVAT FRIDERICVS PRIMVS REX SVECIAE. (Chronogram = MDCCVVVVIIII = 1725.) Laureated bust.
- Rev. QVÆ PARACELSVS PRÆDIXIT REX HIC EFFETVI DABIT. A crown on ears of grain. Ex. Q · S · O · and C · W (Christian Wermuth) 1731. Bronze. 180. II. 53/47. Known as "The Prediction of Paracelsus realized."
- 2703 Ob. Radiant Divine Eye shining upon crown which is accosted by laurel and sword resting on clouds. Below the crown, a globe against which leans a pastoral staff, sceptre and spade. City in rear.
- Rev. FUTURA TERRENA TEIPSUM PRÆTERITA CÆLUM In circle, a star covering entire field. By Wermuth, 1731.
- 2704 Ob. Bust, facing, hands on hilt of sword.
- Rev. — 157 x 168 mm. Wax. 306. 2063.
- 2705 Ob. Bust, facing, and to right. Head bald above, with large bunches of hair over ears. Undervest fluted with frilled neck and open at juncture. Coat with one button, collar turned over at left. Upon central breast what is supposed to have been an amulet, globular and suspended by chain. No inscription or date.
- Rev. — 95 mm. Lead bronzed. Weight, 12 ounces.
- 2706 Ob. "Head." No inscription.
- Rev. — 84 mm. Lead. This is considered by Pachinger, Paracelsus-Sein Leben und Medaillen, as the oldest of the Paracelsus medals. 255. 1911, April, 290/2.
- 2707 Ob. THEOPHRASTUS · – PARACELSVS · A° 1541 Bust, with head slightly to right. Wears a loose robe, with girdle. Upon breast, his amulet. In his right hand, a narrow-necked flask held by its body, the neck having a spiral moulding, while the left hand squeezes something into this flask from the bulbous end of a pear-shaped body, which, again, may be the hilt of his sword.
- Rev. — 77 mm. Lead. Marvin. 5. 1895, Oct. p. 54. In British Museum. As to the vessel he holds, it may contain his Elixir of Life, or be the disinfecting cane that the older physicians used to carry to preserve against infection. According to Dr. F. P. Weber it was the hilt of his two-handled sword, which, it is recorded, Paracelsus used to keep at his side while sleeping. This hilt was supposed by many to contain his familiar, — a little demon.

- 2710b 50 mm. White glass. 93. 268-7.
- 2711 Ob. Bust. Below, the monogram of Albrecht Dürer.
Rev. — Apparently the earliest medal without date. At the Imperial Cabinet at Berlin, as stated in a MS. note attached to Rudolphi's own copy of his work (Index numismatum in virorum de rebus medicis — memoriam percussorum), which in succession belonged to Friedlander and von Duisburg and myself, and which I have recently given to the Harvard Library. As Paracelsus was already thirty-three years old at the time of Dürer's death (1528), and as his reputation and many journeys had already commenced, and as Dürer had visited Basle, it is not improbable that the bust was a veritable portrait from life. GENERAL MEDALS

NOTE. — In describing the non-personal medals the editor has decided to take the radical course of arranging them by subjects and alphabetically, — not geographically, as has generally been done. Here, again, the transitory nature of political divisions has led him to a course which, while open to many criticisms, seems to him to offer more than compensating advantages.

BARBER-SURGEONS

In 1745 the Surgeons separated from the Barbers, and the Royal College of Surgeons resulted. The arms of the Company are thus described: Quarterly, first and fourth, a chevron between three fleams; second and third, a rose crowned. Between the four quarters, a cross of St. George charged with a lion passant gardant.

4081, 4082 In the "Sanitarian" for April, 1899, I discussed at length the medals of the Catholic Church relating to Cholera and other zymotic disease. Upon the Canadian medal said to be of the epidemic of 1832, which was struck in 1830 on the approach of the scourge from the East, and was called "the miraculous medal," the Sacred Hearts of both Jesus and Mary were represented. One of them, however, gives merely the latter. It was signed by a silversmith of Montreal named Grothe. Mr. McLachlan has told me that the dies were engraved by Beaume. We may therefore class it as the earliest medal of purely Canadian workmanship. It has been held by certain ecclesiastic authorities that "the miraculous medal is the badge of our sodalities of the Children of Mary and of the Immaculate Conception, and has a remarkable history. Its origin is ascribed to a vision vouchsafed to a holy servant of God, Catherine, a French Sister of Charity, known to the world as Zoe Lathour. On November 27, 1830, the Blessed Virgin appeared to her and commanded the medal to be made. This was done within two years, with the sanction of the Archbishop of Paris, and the use of the medal spread rapidly throughout the world. Many and great indulgences have been given to its wearers." (See The Use of Religious Medals: Catholic News, 1915, Oct. 9.) One can only say that the use of the medal in question with the fear of the approaching cholera in 1832 seems the more likely, when comparing it with the medals of St. Benedict, as highly indulgenced, which in almost innumerable varieties were issued in Germany and Austria during successive epidemics of the Plague. I have shown, moreover, that there are two distinct varieties of the Miraculous Medal, and all controversy might be prevented by one of them being considered as medical and the other as purely ecclesiastical. — H. Famine

There are many medals which have a remote connection with Medicine as commemorating cataclysms of Nature with possibly resulting epidemics. Such are the medals of Destruction of Crops by Lightning, Drought, Wind, Locusts, Field Mice, Earthquakes, and even terror at comets as preventing agriculture and so causing famine. Most of such medals are described by Pfeiffer and Ruland in their excellent Pestilentia in Nummis. The editor has thought wise to limit descriptions of them as having too tenuous a connection with Medicine. Did he include them he would, to be consistent, have to include the countless medals of War, quite as fertile a source of disease as these other causes. The editor has, however, included a number of Famine pieces, especially some not given by Pfeiffer and Ruland, that the curious may have an idea of what these medals are like. Persons really interested should consult Pfeiffer and Ruland. The editor has omitted a large number collated by Dr. Storer, where it was evident that they referred merely to food given to the poor on account of their poverty and not on account of any famine prevailing.

GERMANY.

During the famines of 1694, 1771-1773 and 1816 a large number of famine pieces were issued, bearing quotations from Scripture and legends inculcating resignation to the will of God and enumerating the high prices prevailing. An extensive series of them are known as the "Kornjuden" medals, and have the general device of a Jew with a sack of grain on his back, of which the Devil tears a corner so that the grain escapes. In others, the Jew is represented as hanging from a tree. Others, still, represent Joseph and his brethren. They are carefully given by Pfeiffer and Ruland in their "Pestilentia in Nummis."

ROME, Italy.

Famine and Abundance are frequently referred to upon Roman Imperial coins with the legend ANNONA or ANNONA PUBLICA or ALIMENTA or CONCIARUM. Often there is but the representation of a female with a cornucopia, or merely this emblem alone; at other times an ear of wheat, or a sheaf of wheat, possibly accompanied by a poppy capsule, which plant, according to Pliny was sewn by the farmers as an offering to Ceres. Sometimes this goddess is represented as holding a cornucopia upright to signify that the corn was not to be wasted, or she is delivering it to Equity to distribute, who stands at her side with scales and the "hasta pura," or pointless spear. Often there is also the prow of a ship, or merely a rudder or oar, to show that the corn has safely crossed the seas. With this key to ancient coins it is hoped that the dates of many ancient famines and epidemics following them may be verified.

Obstetrics and Gynecology

The rich field of obstetrical numismatics has apparently been untouched by any other writer. Even to the ancients it has occurred to propitiate the goddess of child-birth, and at the same time chronicle the safe delivery of the wives of their emperors, by striking a medal in honor of the event, with such legends as JVNQ LVCINA, JVNQNI LVCINAE, LVCINA AVG(ustorum). From the use of the plural in some legends it is possible that the birth of twins was commemorated, though this is doubtful. There are many references to fertility with legends such as FOECVN DITAS, FOECVN DITAS AVGVSTAE, FOECVN DITATI AVG. A number of medals of parturition will be found under Medical Events. Dystocia is frequently referred to, often merely allegorically, as in the medal of Thomas Paine, with the legend, THE MOUNTAIN IN LABOUR.

GERMANY. There are many German medals illustrative of the Plague, some of them ecclesiastical in character. Most of them are given by Pfeiffer and Ruland. The medals of St. Benedict are especially in point. It is generally held by Catholic physicians that they were very widely struck in the central kingdoms of Europe, particularly in Germany and Austria, during the successive invasions of the Plague, not merely to commemorate these historically, but, through the permission and with the aid of the high prelates of the day, to assuage the fears of the people, and, by keeping them more constantly in mind of their utter dependence upon Almighty aid, and upon His continuous presence in their very midst, to render them less likely to be attacked by the dread disease. The whole question of medico-ecclesiastic cure and prophylaxis can be well studied in an article upon "The Use of Religious Medals" in the Catholic News of October 9, 1915. In Pfeiffer and Ruland are described a large number of crosses, of various shapes and with a variety of inscriptions, worn as amulets against the Plague. A few examples of the numerous German Plague medals are given. Students are referred to Pfeiffer and Ruland. — H. R. S.

GREAT BRITAIN. Touch Pieces.

The assertion of power to cure scrofula, "the King's Evil," by the imposition of the Royal Hand, was a convenient way of promulgating the claim of Divine Right for the "Lord's Anointed." The custom began with Edward the Confessor, and at first was rarely exercised. Elizabeth, however, held monthly and even daily receptions, and touched thousands. Cromwell naturally claimed no such efficacy, but the custom was revived at the Restoration, and Charles II is said to have touched some 90,000 persons. James was fond of the performance, but William III did not attempt it. Anne, however, renewed it and had among her patients Dr. Johnson. The Elder Pretender and his sons indulged in it, Charles exercising it in his father's name during the '45. George I declined to touch, very aptly referring an applicant to the Pretender. Henry VII has been thought to be the first who gave a coin at the ceremony, but as to this there is some doubt. Evelyn, in his Numismata, 1697, page 85, says: "My learned friend, Dr. Plot, tells us of a coin, or token rather, bearing the head of Edward Confessor, somewhere found in his Perambulation of Oxfordshire, which by a hole or appendent ring, he conjectures to have been given to wear about the Necks of such as had been touch'd for the King's-Evil: that religious Prince being, it seems, the first who had the Charisma & Sanative Gift, derived to his successors Kings of England."

The angel was selected both because it was the smallest gold coin struck, and from the fitness of the device — the Archangel Michael overcoming the dragon — and of its legend, PER CRUCEM TVAM SALVA NOS CHRISTE REDEMPTOR. The same type, though with different legends, was employed by Elizabeth, James I and Charles I. For those interested in the subject I refer to Pinkerton: Essay on Medals, II. p. 71; Weld: Hist. of Royal Society, p. 89; Evans: 271. XII. p. 190; Cochran-Patrick: Proc. Num. Soc. Lond. 1877, 19 April, p. 10; Philips: 64. 1882, Jan. p. 97; Proc. Manchester Num. Soc. 1867, Part IV, p. 97; 75. 1877, April, p. 6; 1887, p. 84, and 1890, p. 75; Penn. Monthly, 1889, Feb.; Atheneum, 1884, II. p. 240, and more especially to the writings of Miss Helen Farquahar on the subject in the Proc. Brit. Num. Soc. for 1914 and in 272. 1914, 441.

When touching was performed a coin (rose noble, angel or angelot), and subsequently a small special medal, was conferred upon the patient and suspended from the neck by a white ribbon, the whole process being a species of faith cure, analogous to what is sometimes done by clergymen even at the present day. At the Restoration the angel ceased to be a current coin and special medals were substituted.

Miss Farquahar (Lancet, 1914, May 27 and 272. 1914, p. 441) has shown that a brass medalet ordered in 1635 from the Chief Engraver at the Tower Mint was not, as has been believed, a substitute for the gold angel of Charles I, but a pass or tally, given to the patient by the surgeon-in-chief to ensure his admittance to the King's presence, and to certify that he was a sufferer from the disease. She thus removes the impression that Charles I resorted to a token of base metal as a touch piece while there was still gold in the Mint available for the purpose. James II, in the days of his exile and poverty, was compelled to substitute silver for gold. Dr. F. P. Weber (Lancet, 1914, p. 1651) has been of opinion that all the bronze pieces must be regarded as tickets of some kind and not as actual touch pieces.

DRAINAGE

In his paper upon the medals of Sanitation (Sanitarian, 1887, et seq.) Dr. Storer included a large number of medals of Canals. The editor has thought it wise to exclude all those which had merely a commercial aspect, such as the Panama Canal. He has, however, retained a few where the drainage accomplished by the canal was of evident value from the point of view of Sanitation.

GENERAL MEDALS

Food Exhibitions

Dr. Storer included in his list a large number of medals of exhibitions of foods and cooking, but the editor, while admitting that good food has a certain bearing on health, has felt that their medical connection was rather too vague.

HOSPITALS

There are many medals of various "Hospices." Most of these have not been included, as the word means poorhouse rather than hospital. In certain cases, where the building was distinctly of a medical nature, the pieces have been described. Dr. Storer also included in his list a large number of medals of Foundling Asylums. The editor does not give these unless there is a medical allusion upon them.

 prototype of modern foundling hospitals. Sickly and feeble children were conveyed to it and fed on goats' milk, instead of being exposed for destruction in desert places. The building is nearly the same as that represented upon a medal of Vitellius.

EDINBURGH, Scotland.

It would be impossible to understand the multiplicity of medical schools in Edinburgh were not the former antagonism between the Colleges of Physicians and Surgeons, the Royal Infirmary and the University of Edinburgh duly appreciated. Scotland has always been famous for its anatomists and surgeons. Personal rivalry and partizanship have been intense. In his "Edinburgh School of Surgery before Lister" (London, 1918, p. 123), Surgeon Alexander Miles of the Royal Infirmary states that "special courses of instruction were given by extramural lecturers in Mental Diseases, Neurology, Diseases of the Ear, Throat and Nose, Dermatology, Diseases of Children, Applied Anatomy, Operative Surgery, and Tropical Diseases many years before lectureships in these subjects were founded in the University, and thus there arose a number of rival schools within the school, such as Surgeon's Square, Argyle Square, Brown Square, Mints House, and, in more recent days, Park Place and the New School."

MEDICO-ECCLESIASTIC

There are many medico-ecclesiastic medals of Austria and Germany that might almost be given in this list. Aside from the great number connected with the Plague, for which see the works of Pfeiffer and Ruland, they are chiefly of biblical subjects, and have usually emanated from Joachimsthal. Such subjects are the creation of Eve, the pregnancy of Sarah, the cleansing of Naaman from leprosy, the restoration of sight to the blind, the healing of the Samaritan's daughter, and the raising of the dead. A few of these have been already given under various headings. The following is of interest:

- 6882 Ob. SIGNUM · S : ROCHI : CONTRA : PESTEM : PATRONUS : I · C · A · A cross, over which INRI surrounded by mystic words and signs.
Rev. ORA PRO NOBIS GEORGIUS · St. George and the dragon. 30 mm.

ST. ANNE BEAUPRE, Canada. A noted miraculous shrine at which many cures are performed annually. Some fifty of the medals of this shrine have been described by Dr. Storer in the American Journal of Numismatics, 1889, April. The multiplicity of them is to be explained by the rapid wearing out of the dies, owing to the immense number of medals required by pilgrims. The following may be taken as an example:

- 6901* Ob. SOUVENIR DE PELERINAGE A SAINTE ANNE DE BEAUPRE The old church. EX. FONDE EN / 1660

PHARMACISTS

These tokens have been arranged by names rather than by localities, the editor feeling that the issuer of a token is much more important than the place where he happened to live. Furthermore, in these troubled times, the name of the country in which a town is situated varies from day to day. In the case of the British tokens of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, as the mortar and pestle was an emblem used by grocers as well as by pharmacists, only such pieces are listed as can otherwise be verified. Many of the more pretentious medals of pharmacists will be found in the Personal List.

“The Arms of the Company of Apothecaries of England were as follows: A shield azure, on which a man in armor, erect, facing, astride a dragon to left. Supporters, two unicorns. Crest, a helmet on which a rhinoceros to left. Motto: OPIFERQUE PER ORBEM DICOR." (W. Carew Hazlitt, "The Livery Companies of the City of London.") The arms are elsewhere described: "Upon shield, the full-length figure of Apollo, head radiant, bow in left hand, and in right, an arrow, supplanting (astride of) a serpent. This is either on shield or not. Crest, a rhinoceros" (Jewitt, "English Coins and Tokens," 1890, p. 76. 12.) The rhinoceros was apparently employed in reference to the then medicinal use of horn. It has been thought that the skull, just as the mortar and pestle, implied the pharmacist. Thus Burn, London Tokens of the Seventeenth Century, p. 96, says, "The tokens having the skull seem to have been issued by some meditative apothecary." In default of further knowledge I do not, however, give them

This firm, though dealing chiefly in books, was for many years in the drug business, and its tokens could be admitted. They have all been described by Dr. Storer in the American Journal of Numismatics. None of them have any reference to medicine upon them, and therefore the editor has omitted them.

SEWAGE — TEMPERANCE

TEMPERANCE

In Dr. Storer's notes were descriptions of a large number of Temperance medals, he admitting them under the plea that it is wholly within the province of the physician to determine what beverages, and the amount of which, shall be considered as within the bounds allowable for the preservation of health. Regarding this plea as somewhat academic, the editor has decided to exclude them with the exception of certain ones in which the medical side of the question is distinctly recognized.

ADDENDA

That so many medals should appear in the addenda is largely due to the recent publication of Dr. Faludi of Buda Pest, containing many Hungarian medals of which Dr. H. R. Storer was unaware. It is unfortunate that Dr. Faludi's descriptions are of the briefest character. The work is entitled "FALUDI Dr. Géza: Medicina in nummis. Buda Pest, 1929." It is a list of the 1833 medical medals in his collection.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

The following is as complete a bibliography of the subject as it has been possible to prepare. As so many physicians have been naturalists as well, and so many nature lovers have been trained in medicine as well, though merely amateurs therein, the titles of several rare but co-related works will be mentioned.
